

Canada Privacy Policy

At Cambridge, our top priority is protecting the privacy of our clients and potential clients.

This Privacy Statement was last modified on May 11, 2018

How We Obtain Personal Information

We collect non-public personal information from and about you from the following sources:

- Applications and other forms;
- Telephone recordings;
- Consumer or credit reporting agencies; and
- Third parties associated with our customers

How We Use Personal Information

We collect non-public personal information from and about you for the following purposes:

- To comply with applicable laws and regulations, most notably anti-money-laundering and counter-terrorism financing legislation;
- To carry out customer-related requests;
- To conduct internal risk assessments; and
- To protect against fraud.

While some personal information may be collected over the telephone, the purposes of recording and monitoring telephone calls is to evidence business transactions, to ensure quality control and to improve internal training measures.

Disclosure of Personal Information

We do not disclose your non-public personal information to any non-affiliated third parties except:

- To computer services consultants and technicians or other security and compliance consultants, in order to ensure the confidentiality and security of customer records;
- To financial service providers, such as bankers, in order to carry out required institutional risk control, to carry out requested services and/or to protect against actual or potential fraud, unauthorized transactions, claims, or other liability;
- Where required or permitted by law, for example to government and/or law enforcement agencies as required or permitted by law; and
- To any person where we have your written consent to do so.

Please be aware that we may maintain and process your non-public personal information outside of your country of residence. As such, your data are subject not only to local legal and regulatory requirements, but also to legal and regulatory requirements of those other foreign countries. For example, there are lawful requirements to disclose non-public personal information to government authorities in certain countries, including the United States.

How We Protect Personal Information

We protect non-public personal information about our customers by:

- Entering into written confidentiality/non-disclosure agreements with third-party service providers for certain disclosures;
- Restricting access only to those employees who need to know that information in order to provide products or services; and
- Maintaining physical, electronic and procedural safeguards that comply with the relevant laws and regulations.
